Q: What is the difference between subscribing and reading the events of a Topic? What is the difference in terms of performance if you would subscribe to the Topic? If you subscribe to the Topic, would it be a good idea to throw away any events after reading them? A: Subscribing to the topic means that you will receive the events when they are published to the topic. Topic listeners are a type of unsubscribing in that any messages that you are not interested in will be discarded without reaching your subscriber - it is like a the unsubscribe() function in RxJava but less efficient (I am being deliberately vague because it is a bit subjective and depends on you how much you are willing to sacrifice performance for having a clean API). If
