Percutaneous nephrolithotomy (PCNL) is a standard method for the treatment of large or multiple renal calculi. It is a major surgical procedure, but it is less invasive than open surgery.

However, the recurrence of nephrolithiasis after PCNL is reportedly higher than the natural history of urolithiasis. The efficacy and safety of PCNL with aspiration irrigation for stone disintegration were investigated in comparison to PCNL with only suction irrigation. The procedures were performed in 61 patients; 25 underwent PCNL with aspiration irrigation and the other 36 underwent PCNL with only suction irrigation. The anesthesia, analgesia and hospital stay for the PCNL with aspiration irrigation were comparable to those of PCNL with only suction irrigation. The length of the operation was longer in PCNL with aspiration irrigation than in PCNL
