The aim is to accelerate the pace and fluidity of gameplay, and adapt the responsiveness of the game to varying player speed. It also allows players to react with greater tactical and technical awareness to other players' movements and actions. "Our game's underlying systems are designed with the understanding that the speed at which the game is played will evolve as player speeds and technical abilities improve. Therefore, we've designed our game with this in mind," explains Mike Cook, Senior Producer at EA SPORTS. "With our innovative new gameplay and control feature set, players will have more control over the actions of their players in real-time. Through the implementation of motion capture technology, actions will be defined with greater precision, and players will be able to take advantage of the natural speed of the game. However, there is a limit to how much we can predict the actions of players, so we've taken steps to limit the degree of friction within the game and ensure players feel more responsive to what happens around them." HyperMotion technology can simulate traditional controls such as finesse, for example: a player can push or ram another, or a player can manoeuvre their own player - essentially controlling their own player, like a maverick crane operator, by mimicking a player's actions. "The HyperMotion function is very dynamic, because we're taking the continuous, in-game movements of the player and creating an AI character that mimics them in its movements. For example, a player might have a movement with a high degree of control, so the AI character would respond to it by mimicking that motion in its own move," says John McDonough, Senior AI Technical Programmer at EA Sports. "In a sense, this creates a more realistic simulation, in that it is not just a 'AI character responding to AI motions.' The game will respond to the player's actions within the context of the surrounding environment." Key aspects of the technology include:

Acceleration Response - The game reacts with greater speed and intensity to the actions of the player, improving reaction times and the responsiveness of the game. - The game reacts with greater speed and intensity to the actions of the player, improving reaction times and the responsiveness of the game. What's new in Fifa 22:

- New multi-directional, dynamic dribble move - hold down the left trigger and then the left stick in the desired direction to perform a new move while running as your opponent expects you to run.
- New free kicks mechanic - guide the free kick diagonally in the desired direction.
- New off-speed traps - juking opponents around while maintaining distance.
- Dynamic horse leap - cling to your opponent while holding the right trigger.
- New come-ins - with a face-down situation.
- New tackles - manage your approach while racking up chips.

- New self-healing dribbles - stay calm and keep dribbling.
 - New goalkeeping system - dashing to victory with the right timing - either an on-the-nose save, or more likely, a lucky save when an opponent made the optimal run.
 - New penalty shootouts - with modern take-backs, penalty kicks and the ability to trigger competing styles during the shootout.

Agents and their assistant now again shown to work together better and better. It's a bit like having true “tactics” alongside your strategies.

- New substitution system - make the right tactical call to remedy poor finishing, stamina or positioning. Disparate assistance cards might affect selections more than ever.
- New coaching system - gain experience points by tactically improving your club's dynamics.
- New referee game - make, debate, and manage a final day referee calendar. Given refs', like player motivation, are much more dependent on how the game will turn out.
- All-new broadcast presentation - use the new pause system and aesthetic tool in consultation.
