Illustrator: Akihiko Yoshida Producer: Itaru Suzuki Original Development: Team P-SPOT Title: The Tarnished Prince: Rise of the Elden King Published by: Team P-SPOT Release Date: November 8, 2017 System: PC (Windows Vista or later) Number of Players: 1-4 (Ad-Lib maximum: 1-4) Manufacturer: Microsoft Studios (Xbox One, Windows) VISION I, Elden King, declare this world—the land of Fiora—to be a holy place. People, once dead, have been resurrected. And the god of death, Sarkad, has gained an audience. Thick clouds of darkness, that form a shroud for this world of the living, have gathered to create a destructive force that will plunge us into an eternal night. I, the Tarnished Prince, have left this world and been subjected to a curse. I was summoned as a sacrifice, but the god of death failed to open the door to the after-life. I became the catalyst that broke the seal of power and created a chaotic and perverted world. And I was cast out by my fellow gods. I was chased from this land. But I shall not be defeated, and I shall not become a forgotten relic. I shall destroy the god of death, and I shall change the way this world will be lived. Story You are the Tarnished Prince, a descendant of the legendary Tarnished Gods. Your father is dead, and the ritual to raise him from the dead was unsuccessful. You have been banished, now live as a vagabond, and experience what it means to travel across an ocean of trees in search of adventure. Sunken cities, forests filled with monsters, and never-ending rivers await. In this large, vibrant world, you play the role of a Tarnished Prince whose goal is to eliminate the source of evils. It's a deadly game. But you must overcome the evil you will encounter. The way you defeat your foes is up to you. In this world, the Tarnished Gods are regarded as a living legend. Even more than that, not a single person believes in them.

Credit: Playism.com Credit: EOR Credit: PLAYISM.com Credit: EORWe thank Dr. Colin Koehorst for his comments on our article \[[@B1-ijerph-15-01976]\]. We agree with most of his concerns. However, we have to point out that the presentation of our findings is not correct. In the analyses, we did not compute a risk ratio because our analysis does not inform on the prevalence of suicide ideation or suicide attempts in deprived and affluent neighborhoods. Moreover, the presented odds ratios are correct. This is highlighted by the fact that we derived three different groups: those who did not find meaning in life (group A), those who found meaning in life and had high distress (group B), and those who found meaning in life and had low distress (group C). As the reader can see, the odds of suicide ideation or suicide attempts for group A and group C are lower than for group B. In Figure 1{ref-type="fig"} we showed the life satisfaction scale in Figure 1{ref-type="fig"}. We replicated Koehorst et al. and introduced an additional row with this life satisfaction scale. Figure 1{ref-type="fig"} highlights the difference between the life satisfaction scale in Figure 1{ref-type="fig"} and our results. Our findings revealed that people in affluent neighborhoods did not have a higher probability of reporting suicidal behavior compared to people in deprived neighborhoods (group B). In addition, having low life satisfaction is a risk factor for suicidal behavior. People who reported low life satisfaction (group A) have no increased probability of reporting suicidal behavior compared to people in deprived neighborhoods. The odds of being in group A are lower than in group B and C. This is why the odds of finding suicidal behavior are elevated in group C (low life satisfaction and high distress). In group B (high life satisfaction and high distress), the odds of reporting suicidal behavior are still increased compared to group C. Even though there is a difference in life satisfaction, we can conclude that this difference does not affect the risk for suicidal behavior as much as high distress. bff6bb2d33
