Testimonials I had the privilege of presenting in the opening session of a 350-member international business conference in Johannesburg recently. As soon as I walked into the room, the audience immediately quietened down. Within seconds of finishing my presentation, all 350 heads turned to look at me. I was in the presence of God's power. It's the kind of audience you want to share your testimony with. I call it the 'Who' Testimony; quite clearly, there are people who know me for who I really am, and I'm happy to acknowledge them. As for the 'Whose' Testimony, that is reserved for those people whose testimony is to bring glory to God and have impact in the world. For all the rest, there are plenty of other testimonies to be filled. I found it all a bit overwhelming at first. Sitting on the stage, listening to my own testimony, a light from heaven kept breaking through. I began to notice all the people in the audience and the impact God was having on them. So far from the stage, many of the faces in the audience looked tired and weary, yet here were people lifted to new and fresh levels. I witnessed how God changed lives in a matter of moments - not just by the time I finished. The other thing I noticed was how some people seemed to be paying more attention to the environment than the speaker, and even interrupting the speaker to show affection. I'm not against any of that, but I wonder if we need to design testimonies for more objective people, rather than people who are starry-eyed. The palpebral conjunctiva in horses. The equine palpebral conjunctiva is an important structure in a 'dentistry' sense, as the conjunctiva forms a protective covering for the equine cornea and protects it from dust, bacteria and allergic reactions. In response to ocular injury, the conjunctiva swells and adheres tightly to the cornea, forming a thickened

RaymanLegendsCrackSerialKeyDesign and synthesis of novel thymidine derivatives with selective activity against KRAS oncogene-mutated cell lines. Thymidine derivatives are well known as an important class of nucleoside analogue, and some of them are potent cytotoxic agent used as antitumor drugs. The sulfonyl group is an important structure in the development of drugs. There is a continuing need for the identification of new compounds that are active against oncogenic KRAS-mutated cancer cell lines and a study of the structure-activity relationships (SAR) of these compounds. In this study, we aim to investigate the substituents on the thymidine core structure and the effect of different substituents on the sulfonyl group (R1) of the thymidine core structure. Our finding reveals that this activity is strongly dependent on the substituents R1. Among the synthesized derivatives, 4-thiophenesulfonyl derivatives were found to exhibit the most potent anticancer activity. Both targeted KRAS-dependent HCT-116 and KRAS-independent A549 cells were used to evaluate the KRAS-dependent activity of the synthesized compounds. The synthesized compounds showed superior activity to the previously reported thymidine derivatives, with respect to the KRAS mutation status in HCT-116, A549, and HT-29 cells. Additionally, with increasing dose, they showed increased anticancer activity. In particular, compound 4-(4-benzylthiophenesulfonyl)thymidine (SPT-064) showed excellent activity against KRAS-mutated HCT-116 cells. The SAR study of the thymidine core structure suggests that
