A comment was made to me about a colleague the other day and I was shocked by the nature of the comment, both for the content and the fact that the person making it was suspended within 24 hours of making it. So I know that although the "rules of moderation" and the "desired conduct" are kept for the whole SE network, we can assume that the moderators on one site are a very close approximation to the community (I would like to think that a majority of the moderators are representative of the actual community). However there's been a lot of confusion about the "desired conduct" - if

A: This sounds like a file corruption issue (your saved data is no longer valid, but it is still on disk). The best way to find the source of the corruption is to generate a new PS (Presentation) file using the Import option, but instead of copying the main file you want to generate, you can select the "Generate" option instead and select the.PSX extension. That will overwrite the corrupted file with a brand new version, and then it will look like your saved corruption is gone. [Difficulty in diagnosing peri-implantitis based on the classification of the American Association of Oral and Maxillofacial Surgeons (AAOMS) and diagnosis of peri-implantitis]. In the literature, different techniques to establish diagnosis of peri-implantitis have been described. The aim of this study was to evaluate the efficacy of the diagnostic criteria of the AAOMS for peri-implantitis.

Materials and methods: Clinical and radiographic parameters were collected, and peri-implant tissues were examined.

To evaluate the aetiology of peri-implantitis, probing depth, bleeding index (BI), radiographic bone loss and peri-implant mucosa index (PI) were considered. The following evaluation was performed: precision of the diagnostic criteria, sensitivity, specificity, positive predictive value, negative predictive value, and probability of association between aetiology and clinical parameters and the diagnostic criteria of the AAOMS. The chi-squared test was used to compare non-parametric data. Significance was set at $p \leq 0.05$. Ninety-eight implants in 56 patients were included, 51 of which were evaluated for aetiology. Peri-implantitis was more common in male patients (43.6%), the mean age of the sample was 47.3 ± 13.5 years, the mean peri-implantitis period was 12.1 ± 8.9 months and the mean initial marginal bone loss was 2.6 ± 1.3 mm. The precision of the AAOMS criteria for peri-implantitis was 57.1%. The sensitivity and specificity for implant success was 78.6% and 94.4%, respectively. The positive and negative predictive values for implant success was 77.2% and 97.2%, respectively. Low and moderate bleeding indices (BI) were associated with implant success and peri-implantitis, while
