[A case of septic pulmonary embolism caused by Streptococcus pneumoniae]. We report the case of a 57-year-old man who developed rheumatic heart disease (as an adult) and was receiving beta-blocker therapy for heart failure. He underwent mitral valve replacement and was transferred to our hospital after two days of fever. He had high fever (> 39 degrees C), cough, sputum, and dyspnea. His blood pressure was 140/90 mmHg, heart rate was 120 beats/min, and respiratory rate was 32 breaths/min. The initial laboratory data showed acute renal failure (Cr 5.03 mg/dl) with a creatinine clearance rate of 20 ml/min. Chest radiographs showed bilateral pulmonary infarction. Based on the clinical signs, blood culture and lung tissue culture, the patient was diagnosed with septic pulmonary embolism caused by Streptococcus pneumoniae. The patient was treated with intravenous administration of cefotiam and dexamethasone. After therapy, his symptoms improved and the blood pressure decreased to 90/60 mmHg. The renal function normalized 2 months after the diagnosis. This case illustrates that septic pulmonary embolism should be included in the differential diagnosis of a patient with pneumonia.The following description of the background of the present invention is provided to aid in understanding the invention but is not admitted to describe or constitute prior art to the invention. Pathogenic bacteria comprise a major portion of the world's population and play a major role in the spread of infectious diseases. In the United States alone, bacterial diseases affect up to 70 million people each year with more than 200,000 deaths (Ewald, L. D., and Peabody, H. E. (2003) Bacterial Diseases in Perspective. In Handbook of Foodborne Diseases and Food Safety, 2nd edition. Appleton and Lange, East Sussex, England). It is believed that during infectious episodes, bacteria attach to host cells and/or tissues through proteinaceous or peptidoglycan anchors. Once attached, bacteria inject effector proteins to manipulate and ultimately take over the host cell. Therefore, it is believed that a current strategy to combat bacterial diseases is to identify the conserved and essential effector proteins that are vital to bacterial survival. Once identified, these effector proteins can be targeted and abrogated through the use of therapeutic agents, such as antibiotics. One highly virulent bacterial species is Staphylococcus

Q: no bootable device error in xubuntu 12.10 on grub rescue I am using xubuntu 12.10 on my laptop and its was working fine until yesterday, when I found my computer freezed. I had to reboot and my computer began with grub rescue mode. How could I solve it? A: Have you tried holding down Shift while booting to enter the GRUB Menu? This may help you to choose the proper kernel to boot on. If that is not an option, it means you may need to boot from a Live CD/DVD to run chroot A study published in the journal Experimental Neurology has found that the majority of people with MS, a neurological disease characterized by the deterioration of the brain and spinal cord, will not suffer a relapse while they are on treatment. This is the first comprehensive study of MS relapse rates on current and first-line treatments. (see Nature Medicine, Volume 10, No. 8, pp. 941-943, August 2004). The paper is published in The New England Journal of Medicine. MS is a neurological disease that involves inflammation in the brain and spinal cord and can lead to a variety of symptoms including blurred vision, unsteady walking, muscle weakness and paralysis. Most people diagnosed with MS are treated with medication to reduce the frequency of relapses and slow the progression of the disease. In the study, investigators analyzed three clinical trials that tested the effects of three different types of first-line treatments on relapses in MS. Based on the results, 31% of those on interferon beta-1a, 25% of those on the oral drug glatiramer acetate and 16% of those on natalizumab (Tysabri(R)) experienced a relapse. These relapse rates were similar to the relapse rates in other studies of patients taking other first-line MS drugs. "The bottom line is that interferon beta-1a, glatiramer acetate and natalizumab reduce the frequency and intensity of relapses in people with MS," said Dr. Christopher Plouffe, a neurology professor at Brigham and Women's Hospital and Harvard Medical School and co-author of the study. "Most patients will not relapse while
