Fashion Software - SkinJucer Software 21 Programmer/Programmers may operate in a variety of different environments and under a variety of different conditions and demands. So, they are expected to handle a wide range of both work-related and personal situations. If they do their job, then the chances of them being on a computer for any length of time are pretty good. Not only do they use their computers, they also program the programs that enable computers to accomplish the jobs that need to be done. As of the year 2007, there were over 98.4 million people that worked in the programming field. More than half of them were employed by computer related companies. This represents a change from the 7.6 million that were employed in the field just a few years before. In fact, more programming jobs in software were created in the year 2007 than any other year. The career field of computer science grew by 22.3 percent as well. If you work in any capacity at any of these computer companies, chances are you are a programmer. If you work for a company that sells computers, then you might be a computer programmer. To answer the question "What do programmer do?" we need to first know what it means to be a programmer. You may work at a company that works with computers and use software that these computers are supposed to run. But that's not actually how programmers work. The most important job description for them is software developer. It sounds like the job could be done by anyone, but in fact, the programmers are the ones that do the most work. They develop software programs, whether it's for a computer, a cell phone, or some other electronic product. A programmer must be able to understand the programming language that she is using. If she doesn't understand the coding language, she will have a difficult time actually writing the programs that enable her to do the job that she is supposed to do. The programming language that they use is called a source code. Some people say that source code is the language that programmers write. They program in this language, which then is run through a compiler to generate the compiled code or machine language code. The programmer may use an IDE (Integrated Development Environment) to write the program. IDEs have been around for years, but it's only been relatively recently that they have become popular. Most IDE's are integrated with most programming languages. That means that people who use a language that is not typically integrated can use the IDE
