A baby stroller has been developed for the convenience of parents. FIG. 1 shows a conventional folding stroller which includes a base 1, a seat 2, and a stroller frame 3 disposed in between the base 1 and the seat 2. The base 1 has a chain mechanism 4 pivotally connecting the base 1 with the stroller frame 3 to allow the stroller frame 3 to fold and unfold. However, the conventional stroller has the following shortcomings: 1. When the stroller frame 3 is unfolded, it is necessary to hold the chain mechanism 4 in order to avoid a dangerous accident; thus, the operation of the chain mechanism 4 is very difficult. 2. When the stroller frame 3 is folded into the base 1, the folded stroller frame 3 will be too close to a trunk or a bottom of a car, so that the user will not be able to operate the chain mechanism 4 during the folding of the stroller frame 3. 3. The base 1 and the stroller frame 3 are detachable but the base 1 is not foldable, thereby preventing the stroller from being stored in a compact space, and increasing the inconvenience of carrying the stroller. The present invention has been accomplished under the circumstances in view. According to one aspect of the present invention, the stroller comprises a base with a chain mechanism pivotally connecting the base with a seat so that the seat and the base can fold and unfold relative to each other; a shaft tube rotatably connected to the base so that the seat can be rotated relative to the base to an open position or a closed position, and a link connected between the base and the shaft tube to control the rotation of the seat. According to another aspect of the present invention, the stroller comprises a base, a shaft tube rotatably connected to the base, a seat rotatably connected to the shaft tube, and a control link connected between the base and the shaft tube to control the rotation of the seat. According to still another aspect of the present invention, the base comprises a tube frame; a chain mechanism pivotally connecting the base with the tube frame so that the base can fold and unfold relative to the tube frame; a shaft tube rotatably connected to the tube frame to receive the chain mechanism and to allow the base to fold and unfold relative to the tube frame; and a control link connected between the tube frame and the shaft tube to control the rotation of the tube frame.
