The new company has published a development roadmap. .Brief Description of the Prior Art The use of electric motors to be used in conjunction with a driving system employing a traditional synchronous motor for driving agricultural machinery is well known. The motor is controlled via a digital control system wherein the output of a timing sensor is converted to a digital value which is used to trigger the tripping of a power switch circuit. In one system, the output of the timing sensor also provides a feedback signal which is fed through a logic gate and used to reset the drive system at the desired point in the operation cycle to initiate the next operation. In such systems, it is customary to employ motors having a small number of poles which can be produced in large quantities at low cost. However, for heavy duty or high horsepower work, it is advantageous to employ motors having a large number of poles. Such motors are available in large quantities and are quite expensive. Moreover, it is desirable in systems employing such motors to be able to control the drive system such that the latter will be able to drive the machine at a variable speed but the input of the motor remains in a fixed speed range when the power switch is open.using
