In your example, the word without the apostrophe would be the singular noun that means "a book without a cover". The apostrophe is intended to mark the spelling of a possessive to make it clear which item is meant. For example, sentences with a comma would not be possible: "The book without a cover is sitting on the table." "The book without a cover is about to get lost." "The book without a cover has been sold." The only example I can think of where you might want to use a possessive for the word without is if you wanted to show that it was specifically the same book you were talking about: "That book without a cover is useful for my own reference." However, this is a very unusual situation. It's not clear why you would need to talk about the book as if it had a piece missing, since you obviously don't understand that it is missing any piece.

Q: How to call a method from another class in java
In my Main class I want to call a method from another class.
private static void main(String[] args) { new Class1("Hello", "world", i); } Class1: public static void main(String[] args) { i++; }
But it gives this error: Main.java:18: error: i in Class1 cannot be accessed in Class1
I want to increment i and access it in the class (Class1) where i is defined.

A: As an idea, you could make a public getter to Class1.
public int getI() { return i; }

[Treatment of ocular hypertension in glaucoma with an intraocular pressure-lowering device (Icare). A multicentre controlled study].
Intraocular pressure can be lowered by external compression of the eyeball with an IOP-lowering device (Icare). There are some complications to be taken care of. The aim of this study was to answer the question whether a successful treatment with an IOP-lowering device makes sense for more intensive controls of IOP in patients with ocular hypertension or glaucoma. In a prospective randomized multicentre trial 37 out of 80 patients with ocular hypertension or open-angle glaucoma started treatment with an IOP-
